- A. Congregate Services: Congregate Buddhist Services shall be led only by persons who are properly credentialed as a Buddhist Priest, Nun, Monk or an outside religious leader endorsed by his/her teacher. Chanting is common for Buddhist groups and is usually done in the local language. Buddhist inmates, under the supervision of the outside religious leader, may assist by saying prayers and leading chants. For purposes of this policy, determination of an inmate's standing or membership as a practitioner of this faith shall be made either by the person providing religious services for the institution housing that individual or by a qualified Buddhist religious leader consulted by the religious services administrator.
- B. Individual Worship Practice: Worship practices vary depending on sect and culture. Most Buddhists practice a form of silent, sitting meditation. Individual Buddhist worship is to be conducted in the inmate's cell/bed area.
- C. Diet Requirements: Religious dietary requirements are to be approved through the religious services administrator in cooperation with the dietary operations manager.
- D. Holy Book: There is no single holy book for Buddhists; however, collections of various teaching in a variety of editions may be utilized. Buddhists in Transitional Program Units may possess holy books in keeping with local policy limitations.
